

CALL FOR PAPERS

MIGRATION AND DEVELOPMENT: LOOKING FORWARD POST-COVID-19

Venue: "Mother Teresa" University, Skopje, Republic of North Macedonia

JUNE 10th
2021

The COVID-19 pandemic will seem to be under control after the vaccine is available for the most vulnerable groups, thus it might appear as if we are about to get back to our normal life. However, even though the governments' responses to the virus may be slowly withdrawn, their impact from geopolitics to healthcare to technology will live on. This infers that we cannot return to the world as it was before and we should expect a "post-COVID world" and a "New Normality". Hence, it is of critical importance to deliberate the "new normal", the outlook and prospects of post-COVID world.

Current developments indicate that as countries reopen their borders, they will be requiring additional health requirements for travel, which could drive more people into irregular migration pathways. They could also restrict travel and tourism and limit the potential of migration and human mobility in contributing to development. On the other hand, the accelerated adoption of technology and the shift from offline to online channels have created new behaviors and preferences. Many of these new habits are likely to stick and many of the changes might be permanent, which raises questions concerning migration and mobility. What are the trends and patterns of migration in a post-covid-19 era? What will be the impact of the accelerated adoption of technology in human mobility and migration? Will the new way of working be averting brain drain in post-covid-19 era?
